

European Water Resources Association (EWRA)

8th International Conference

26-29 June 2013

Porto, Portugal

Authors' publication ethics

1. All manuscripts submitted for publication to the Journal, as original papers, are considered as representing the authors contributions and have not been copied or plagiarized in whole or in part from other works. The manuscripts should be written according to the guidelines.
2. The authors should ensure that they have not used work or phrases of others and in case they did so, they have cited or quoted the corresponding material.
3. The authors should cite, in their manuscript, references to public sources of information to permit the author's peers to repeat the work. Also, the manuscripts should cite those publications that have been influential in determining the nature of the reported work and that will guide the reader quickly to the earlier work that is essential for understanding the present investigation. No information obtained privately, such as personal communication, correspondence and/or discussion, should be cited in the manuscript without the written explicit permission from the source from which this information was obtained.
4. The authors may criticize other published work on scientific ground, though, personal criticism is totally inappropriate.
5. Authors of a manuscript are persons who have significantly contributed to the research and paper preparation. The corresponding author has the responsibility to include all author names in the paper and get their agreement for the submission and publication of the manuscript. No additions of other author names are allowed during the reviewing process.
6. It is the obligation of the author who discovered a significant error or inaccuracy in his published paper to notify the Editors promptly and cooperate with them for including the appropriate correction in the Journal.

